Points of Interest

Bellpits

The round mounds visible in the park and on either side of Church Lane are 'bell-pits' where ironstone was mined from the 1700s. Pits were arranged in rows, giving a 'pock-marked' appearance to the landscape. This method of mining was used where the coal or ore was near the surface. A shallow shaft was dug, the iron ore excavated and then removed using a winch and bucket, much like a well. The pit in cross section resembles a bell.

Tankersley Church

The Domesday Book records the existence of a church at Tankersley but the present St. Peter's church dates from the c14th. It is grade 2* listed. The 'Clyppings' ceremony is held here annually here on St. Peter's Day and involves parishioners joining hands to form a circle round the church to ward off evil spirits. The word 'clypping' means embracing. If the church is open you may wish to go inside to see the beautiful stained glass windows and war memorial inside. The eastern window on south side of nave (below) is thought to be by William Morris and Co. in the style of Burne-Jones and is in memory of Ellen Walker, who died in 1879. There are also cannon balls from the Battle of Tankersley in 1643 during the Civil War on display.

Tankersley Park

Tankersley Park dates from the time of Edward III. In Elizabethan times it was owned by Francis Talbot the 11th Earl of Shrewsbury. He sold the land to Thomas Wentworth, who became the First Earl of Stafford. In 1727 Daniel Defoe passed through the area on a tour of England and wrote,

"From Rotherham we turned north west to Wentworth, on purpose to see the old seat of Tankersley, and the park, where I saw the largest red deer that, I believe, are in this part of Europe: one of the hinds, I think, was larger than my horse, and he was not a very small pad of fourteen hands and half high."

From Daniel Defoe 'Tour thro' the Whole Island of Great Britain' (1727)

Ironstone mining from the 1700s encroached on the Park and the deer were removed to Wentworth.

Tankersley Old Hall

(Detour of about 1 mile to see the Old Hall. Turn right after exiting the woods opposite Tankersley Church and follow Black Lane down, passing under the by-pass and continuing to where the lane bends left. The Hall is on the right. Retrace your steps to rejoin the walk. N.B. The ruins are not open to the public.)

Tankersley Old Hall was built in the late 16th century by the Savile family. The earlier manor house site is thought to have been on site of the large house to the north of the St Peter's church, where the remains of an old moat can still be seen, but a new Hall was built in the middle of the Park in Elizabethan times. In 1652 the Hall was leased to Sir Richard Fanshawe but in July 1654, Anne, their daughter, died. She was buried in Tankersley Church and the family left the house before the end of the year and returned to London. The ruins of the hall also featured in 'Kes' - the film of Barry Hines' book 'A Kestrel for a Knave'.

Westwood Reservoir

The dam was built to supply water to the Thorncliffe Ironworks.

Westwood Rows and Riots

Two rows of cottages used to stand here overlooking the reservoir until they were demolished in the late 1960s. They were built by Newton Chambers & Co. Ltd to house non-union labour during a strike at the company in 1870.

The Westwood riots took place in January 1870 when the houses were attacked by an armed crowd of between 300 and 1500 (estimates vary) striking workers, who had refused to accept a cut in pay. The small police garrison was overwhelmed and reinforcements had to be brought in from Barnsley to put an end to the looting, violence and damage taking place. Although there were no deaths, 23 workers were sent for trial at York and soldiers were garrisoned at Mortomley for the next 6 months till the dispute ended.

Walking Information

Walking with Dogs

There are things to consider when walking in the countryside to ensure you, your dog, other rural users and landowners can all enjoy the countryside. The Countryside Code advocates keeping dogs under 'effective' or 'proper' control – where they stay close by and you are confident they will respond to your command – but there are certain situations, and times of year, such as when birds are nesting, when specific rules apply that require dogs to be kept on a lead.

Dog walkers should take extra care when walking dogs around livestock (especially young farm animals) and horses, where there are ground nesting birds, near reservoirs and streams used for public water or by the coast. There may also be local restrictions banning dogs from areas that people use.

If you find yourself being threatened by cattle – which can become unsettled by the presence of a dog – while out walking it is always best to release your dog from its lead. The dog will be able to run away and the cattle's interest will be diverted from you to the dog.

Remember to clear up after your dog, even on farm land, as dog faeces can carry diseases that can affect humans, farm animals and wildlife. It is also worth remembering that some people are wary of dogs and may find even your friendly dog intimidating!
